REGARDING AS DANGEROUS

Presley, Escaped West Roxbury Hospital Patient. Still at Large

"He is considered dangerous." That is the way the Boston police headquarters better describes Charles Presley, who escaped the United States Public Health Service Hospital on New Year's day.

His further description in detail follows: Age, twenty-three; height, five feet eight inches; weight, 150 pounds; dark hair; complexion, fair.

At the time of his escape he wore a short army coat, blue overalls and a green cap.

On October 21, last year, he made his first escape from the hospital and made a vicious attack upon an elderly woman near Walpole. Her outcries were heard by a farmer who went to her assistance and whose approach scared Presley away.

When the farmer reached the woman she was on the ground back of some bushes which fringed the highway where, she said, he had been dragged by Presley. Her clothing was almost completely torn from her body and she was in a badly exhausted state.

Colonel Chrenquist has reported the escape of Presley to the public. He says he does not consider it proper or necessary to inform the public of the escape of men of the type of Presley.

Asked today if he did not think newspapers should be notified and descriptions printed to aid in the apprehension of such men and to warn the women of the section to be on their guard, he said he did not think so because of the effect it might have upon the friends of other inmates of the hospital.

Such publicity is not desirable from the hospital point of view, he said. But the police believe it is not to consider him so.

But the police believe it is not to consider him so. Other records in his case say that he is considered dangerous.

"That may all be," Colonel Chrenquist was answered that the Boston American was a circulation with facts relative to the condition of Presley as officially known, and was also advised that all the Boston American was in the vicinity of the hospital in the event of his escape.

Nothing has been heard of Presley by the police or the West Roxbury hospital since his escape. People living in the vicinity of the institution are anxious that news of such escapes should be kept as a means of protection of the women and children.

Groundhog and Peach Buds Herald Spring

EXTRA! EXTRA!
SPRING IS HERE!

Weather bureau and calendar to the contrary notwithstanding, the gentle Spring of which poets sing has arrived, according to correspondents in Wine endon, and Plainfield, Ct.

These correspondents, whose reputation for veracity is unquestioned, report conditions already existent which usually do not appear until April or May in these parts. According to these gentlemen, groundhogs have appeared in numbers, wild deer are on the rampage in farmers' orchards, snakes are sunning themselves idly, while flocks of cranes, robins and bluebirds have been seen moving north.

Furthermore, dandelion, pussywillow, rhubarb and other Spring flowers and vegetables are sprouting and peach trees are in bud.

"Loveliest Girls" Embodied Every Type

By MRS. THEO ALICE RUGLES KITSON.

Well known sculptor and art authority and one of the judges in the Boston American Loveliest Girl Contest.

The recent contest to determine the "Loveliest Girl in New England" was certainly a revelation to those who had the opportunity of viewing the thousands of photographs submitted to the judges. These pictures, each one of which was inspected by the judges, included every imaginable type of woman, embodying the characteristics of the various nationalities concerning the population of the country.

Viewing the prize winners in a perfectly impersonal way, it was interesting to note how entirely different they were. Each a distinct beauty, was extremely difficult to compare one as difficult as to decide between a fly and a rose.

In order to determine whether the beauty reflected in the photograph was the art of the photographer or that possessed by the living subject, personal interviews were arranged with the eleven candidates who were selected the loveliest. At this interview the judges found that some of the subjects were far less attractive than their photographs, while others were lovelier than their pictures.

FIRST AWARD INANIMOUS. However, intelligence and health were required more than personal beauty. Of the final eleven candidates elected, distinctions were obtained as to their physical and personal traits, occupation, education, etc. With these facts for reference the judges finally interviewed each contestant and awarded themselves regarding their personal qualifications.

The award of the first prize to Mrs. Walter was unanimous. Mrs. Walter is a young woman of culture and refinement, whose personality, combined with exceptional beauty of features and form, a very attractive personality. It was also interesting to learn that among the thousands of candidates the first choice of the judges was a married woman, and the mother of two children.

FAVORED MISS O'DAY. The selection of Mrs. Lota C. Seim for the second prize was a different type except that she, like Mrs. Walter, was a married woman. Seim was in refinement and personality, although she did not have the advantage of college education to aid her mental development. Personally I felt that Miss O'Day qualified for second prize, but the majority ruled otherwise.

THE THIRD PRIZE WINNER, Mrs. Olga Beals Atkins, was a decided beauty favoring the Scandinavian type. A blend of the features and physical development, though of less intellectual attainment than the first two prize winners.

Regarding the winner of the fourth prize, Mrs. Christine E. Fink, I felt that Miss O'Day qualified for second prize, but the majority ruled otherwise.

As I look back at the contest, I really feel that Miss O'Day should have been among the winners. While Miss Atkins is a very lovely young woman, quiet and reserved, Miss O'Day, in my opinion, excelled her in every point of beauty of features, form and natural grace.

Miss O'Day possessed a charming personality and equalled any of the others in refinement and modesty. Being Miss O'Day is not a professional artist's model as indicated, but was posed exclusively for one of our leading Boston artists.

LAURENCE STATION TYPE. I hope some day that a newspaper will see its way clear to conduct a similar contest for women beyond the girl age. What is more glorious than a typical American matron? The stands supreme among the women of all nations. While in other countries the beauty of women fades with the passing youth, American women seem to rather strength and dignity with age.

A splendid example of the matron's type was Mrs. Esther W. Apthorp of Salem, who received honorable mention and whom we found as a decidedly handsome woman. It was interesting to note that Mrs. Apthorp was the first three of the four married women among the seven women who received honorable mention.

This was the most carefully and the most conscientiously considered contest I have ever come to my attention and I think the Boston American deserves great praise for its efforts in making it such a success.

It should be borne in mind that the photograph alone did not determine this contest, but that the personal appearance and qualifications of the eleven loveliest young women were examined at personal interviews with the judges.

WORCESTER FUGITIVE IS LIVING IN JAPAN

Worcester, Jan. 11.—Definite information has reached the State police in the Worcester district that Irving P. Deimann was one of several men against whom sensational newspaper charges were brought. He fled from Worcester and went into hiding on Cape Cod and from there fled to Montreal.

GREAT NAVY OR DISARMAMENT

Secretary Daniels Declares No Half-Measure Will Suffice

Washington, Jan. 11.—Casting aside the proposal for a naval holiday as a makeshift understanding of no real value, Secretary of the Navy Daniels appeared today before the House Committee on Naval Affairs and declared that the United States must either join at once in a worldwide agreement to reduce armaments or else embark on a great new building program which will make the American navy equal to if not the greatest in the world.

No half-way measure will suffice, he said. Equality with the greatest or the protection of an international agreement alone are worthy of serious consideration, he declared.

And if President-elect Harding asks his advice on the question Secretary Daniels said he would inform him that if the United States was not immediately to become a member of the League of Nations this government should at once initiate steps toward a world disarmament plan.

Under the naval act of 1916, the President is authorized by Congress to invite the nations of the world to sit around a table and talk of reducing the armaments of the world.

"With reference to the naval program of the United States," said Secretary Daniels, "there are just two courses, and only two open."

"To secure an international agreement with all, or practically all, the nations, which will guarantee all to competition in navy building, reduce the national burden and insure the peace of the world."

"To hold aloof from agreement or association with other nations as the size of armament. This will require us to build a navy strong enough and powerful enough to be able to protect our own American shipping, defend American policies in the distant possessions, as well as at home, and by the presence of sea power to command the respect and fear of the world."

Harvard Will Get After 'Book Hogs'

Harvard has become aroused by "book hogs." The practice of "lifting" books from the college and Union libraries has become so rampant that the authorities are taking drastic steps to put a stop to further depredations. The Union had voted to fine each offender five dollars, demand that the book be returned or replaced and mete out such further punishment as its governing board thinks appropriate.

Henry H. Paxon, the football player, who is an officer of the Union and president of the student council, today served the "book hogs" in the volume of the Crimson.

Three Families Are Driven Out by Blaze in Washington Street Block

Three families were driven from their beds early today by a fire in the business and apartment house block at No. 1217 Washington street, Newton.

The fire was on the second floor, in the apartment of William J. Kelly. It was confined to the Kelly apartment, although the smoke went through the hall and caused the occupants.

A lighted cigarette stub caused the blaze, the police believe. The damage was slight.

A. F. OF L. ABANDONS PLAN FOR MEXICAN ALLIANCE

Mexico City, Jan. 11.—Owing to widespread opposition the American Federation of Labor has abandoned its plan of affiliating with the Mexican labor organization, but it is proposed to exercise the closest unity between the two bodies in the future.

It was announced today by delegates attending the Pan-American labor congress.

COPPER HAVE BETTER TOE

Boston Market Opens Weak, but Rallyes; Curb Prices More Irregularly

The Boston market had a weak opening, although a good many issues were unchanged on first transactions, but the advance in New York was a supporting influence here, and before the morning was over a majority of issues were showing gains. Trading was quiet and narrow on the whole. Foreign business was featureless. A better tone marked copper. It is stated that export sales of metal have been largely resorted to, that domestic inquiry is increasing, and that the price for copper is firm. Point of view gains were made during the morning by Calumet & Arizona, Ontario, Island Creek, United Fruit, American Sugar, and others. Pointe a la Poudre, Boston Elevated, and others were unchanged.

DOVE OF PEACE IN BASEBALL

No Deception

YES BUD BOTH IS MARRIED TO GAY BOY DAN AND HIS HUSBAND HIGAN TIDE

Dispute Over Judge Landis as Supreme Head Settled—New Pact Under Way

Chicago, Jan. 11.—The Dove of Peace fluttered into the Congress Hall and upset all the doves to effect, that the minor league issue would not enter into an agreement with the majors where by Judge K. M. Landis is to become supreme head of organized baseball. A committee of six minors are making here and members of the committee had stated that they would not recommend adopting the plan made by the majors for reorganizing baseball. In the first place they were opposed to an executive board composed of the minor league judges, with John Johnson and John Landis as assistants. Representatives of the major leagues were on hand and after they had buttonholed members of the minor committee, they well known dove came fluttering in, twittering cheerfully.

Now it looks as though the committee will recommend that they join in the general agreement. Their recommendation will be made tomorrow. "Certain concessions were made to them, however, and there will be some modifications of the general one."

When the minors first came to town there was every indication that they would stand pat. "We will never stand for the draft," thundered Jack Dunn of Baltimore. "It is unfair to us, regardless of the arguments of our opponents."

The status of the Pacific Coast League looked doubtful. Edwin had little to say about the Pacific Coast League. Edwin admitted, however, that the Coast League was in favor of the pact with reservations. As the arguments went on, a little gathering of majors in another part of the hotel where they were proposing modifications calculated to please the little fellow.

Then they came out of their retreat, began their usual "dove" moves and pretty soon in came that dove and it became the center of attraction.

When a Girl Marries

AN UNUSUAL STORY OF EARLY WEDDED LIFE
Anne Finds a Friend Who Appreciates Her Unselfish
Attitude Toward Foolish Val Cosby

By Ann Lisle

"You can't imagine how childish—by grieved Val to be having most of her own things," said Val. "She went on, scarcely noticing my stare." "Our invalid is all settled up in a crib-colored perogee and a silver-crested child. She seems to be getting a queer sort of joy out of wearing her own frills instead of mine. Indeed, I'll call it. And the little old Lady Pettigrew looks so, as if she'd sneezed almost to death. I suppose it amuses her to think that someone who's been so near the edge of things can be so grateful for her just bringing down a bag full of lingerie." Words leaped to my lips, but I cut into sound. I was very careful as to that. But in silence I pondered: "How do we know what was in the bag Aunt Mollie brought down? What could be more natural for her on hearing of the accident than to pack a bag and come to nurse Val?" But just then Aunt Mollie herself followed a timid knock and was in the room. I'd never seen her look so old, so broken.

"Anne, dear and Jim," she cried. "You dear children! I'm glad to see you. Jerry—let a child see me when her train goes, please." "Train?" protested Jim, who I based myself knowing the old dear. "You haven't seen this long distance without planning to stay night—and didn't you keep your car?"

"I came in a taxi," replied Aunt Mollie, fidgeting up from the comfortable chair into which I placed her. "Didn't you keep that?" asked Jim with no apparent idea that he was acting as an inquirer.

"Of course she didn't," I interrupted. "Aunt Mollie knows perfectly well that Loretta will have to drive to town if she has to go. Though I can guess she really planned to walk to the station if I need be rather than put any one out."

A Grateful Glance
She flashed me a grateful glance as she as Virginia started to leave with a little basket of housewife's preparation, exclaiming at the same time:

"But we aren't going to let you go, dear Mrs. Pettigrew! I do want you to stop to dinner and then if I can persuade you to stay the night, I'd be glad to find you all the things you'll need."

"Oh, I couldn't!" said Aunt Mollie in distress that changed her usual bustling, bustling manner to one of fluttering helplessness. I thought she sent me another pleading glance, so again I tried to assume control of the situation.

"Perhaps Aunt Mollie," I said, "go back to Lucy Wiloughby. We haven't told you about the accident from which Val recovered. I have, we, Jennie? And if Aunt Mollie does feel that she can't stay with the more seriously injured invalid and must herself get back to the little girl who has no one but a frightened sister to lean on, let the Pettigrew Fairy Godmother whisk her—why, we ought to be flattered," I finished breathlessly, wondering if I'd said just what where I started in.

"That's it! That's it!" said Aunt Mollie. "Be contented!"

"Of course, I would help him," she said. "I could get that little elevator man to help out with the alibi. But that would be certain to bring you O. K. Now it's all up to you, Jennie. Are we going to do anything to help Harry?"

"Error seized upon by her as her swift mind vaulted herself on the scene—stood down in front of the Court Building. "But—what if I went on the stand—the District Attorney—she could get out of no more."

"That's exactly it," Uncle George said, bravely. "Of course, you're dear Harry, but the District Attorney would cross-examine you until he'd found out every last word about you. And what he'd learn would give New York the biggest snit it had for years."

When the Mirror Speaks True

By NELL BRINKLEY

"Oh, but you must stay. I've just remembered that there's a train between the 4:30 and the 5:45," in sister Virginia, strangely imperious, got away. "Well, see you for clothes. I can see that you didn't plan to stay or of course you'd have packed something of yours in Val's bag."

"I don't stay," muttered Aunt Mollie again. "I must get home. The invalid, 127-18, be down at my little cottage before midnight and even if the girls don't expect me so late."

She halted herself up and finished in something like the fervor. "I mean even if they don't expect me so late."

The New Moon and Venus

TOMORROW evening the crescent of the new moon will be seen in the sunset sky beautifully contrasted with the piercing gleam of Venus, like an arc light in heaven. Mars, visible farther west, looks dull compared with the evening queens.

THE COUNTER ATTACK—Illustrating the w.k. saying, "It happens in the best of families." After bringing havoc to the enemy stronghold we suffered an attack on our rear. (U. & U.)

CRIPPLED KIDDIES AT PLAY—The Spaulding Public School of Chicago is devoted to 300 crippled children. They manage to find some normal part of their bodies to exercise. (U. & U.)

AN OUTDOOR GYMNASIUM—Kathleen O'Connor keeps in shape (we rather like that "in shape" remark) by exercising out of doors. An obliging elephant at movieland lends his trunk in lieu of a trapeze. Soon the headlines director will call and Jumbo will amble away to become a part of some picture in "Egypt." 'Tis a great life in showland. (U. & U.)

WATCHING THEIR RIVALS WORK—J. Bassett's "Pembroke Royal" and "Pembroke Fencer" watching the meet of the Herefordshire Coursing Club at Bishopstone, England. (U. & U.)

WIDOW AND BABY OF SUICIDE—Mrs. Marion Fick and baby Henry. Edward E. Fick killed himself the other day because his wife would not free him so that he could marry Miss Mildred Shannon of Bangor, Me. Fick was a handsome man, college graduate, and had what most of us would consider an ideal home. Verily, these are days of queer notions and deeds. (U. & U.)

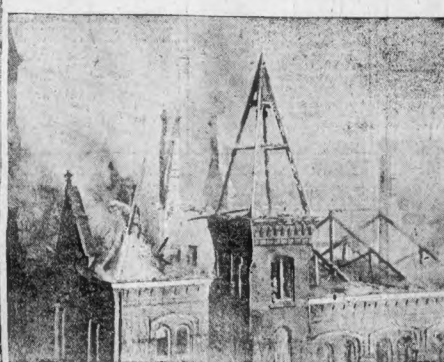

ENGLISH ROYALTY—A thoroughbred shorthorn heifer, "Walwick Lass," owned by the Duke of Portland, won the championships at the Warwick Fat Stock Show (Eng.). (U. & U.)

STORK VISITS CAPITAL ZOO—This young buffalo is the most recent addition to the Zoo at Washington, D. C. He is no bigger than a calf and is already the pet of the children. The zoo keepers were pleased, as buffaloes are getting scarcer each year. (U. & U.)

NIGHTIE NIGHTIE—The bold camera man peeped into the boudoir of Bobb Daniels and got this. Not much like our old flannel nightie, but we are not in the movies. (K. & H.)

LET YOUR EAR HOLD THE RECEIVER—A new telephone receiver has been invented by Erick Heusdorf of Germany which fits over the ear and allows the free use of the hands. It has been used by the German military for some time. (Gilliams.)

FAMOUS STATE HOUSE DESTROYED—West Virginians who have been agitating the construction of a new State House will now have their wish, for the famous Capitol building at Charleston has fallen victim to fire. Many valuable records of the State were lost, the fire spreading rapidly, due to the old-fashioned construction of the building, which was erected long before the "fireproof" days. (U. & U.)

OLDEST "OLD GUARD" WELCOMES "RECRUIT"—Major Charles M. Huestis of Lakeside, N. J., has been a member of the "Old Guard" at Buffalo for a half century. He recently made a trip to Buffalo to help initiate Captain William Steiger, the youngest member, who is 25 years old. (U. & U.)

Congress Stands Indicted by American Legion of Abuse of Sick Soldiers

The memorial presented by the American Legion to President Wilson, President-elect Harding and every member of Congress relative to the neglect and abuse of sick and wounded former service men, is a terrible indictment of the attitude of the national government and a complete and remarkable corroboration of the survey of the field of the war-disabled recently made by the Hearst newspapers.

Indifference and neglect, the memorial charges, have been the cause of many deaths. Medical experts of the government have sounded warnings of the calamity which confronts the nation; have submitted facts and figures to evidence the threat of an awful epidemic of insanity and tuberculosis; have appealed time and time again for appropriations necessary for the construction of an adequate number of proper hospitals.

The memorial says, as the Hearst newspapers said, that thousands of poor boys are herded with the criminal insane; are sleeping on cots in cold and dismal cellars and hallways of private institutions; are relegated to cheap contract homes and hospitals without proper medical care or treatment, and that no form of vocational training or education or other incentive to make them happy or to benefit them in any way is being given.

Last year Congress refused to appropriate a cent for new hospital construction. It did appropriate $44,000,000 for medical care and treatment. This year that amount has been cut by $13,000,000. Last year the average population in government-owned and leased and contract private hospitals was from 12,000 to 20,000 a day. In the last few months the minimum has been 20,000 a day, and the population is steadily increasing.

The best students of the situation say that within a few months the daily minimum population will be 30,000, and that a fluctuating population of from 30,000 to 40,000 will continue for five or six years. And the Sundry Civil bill of this Congress does not include an appropriation for new hospitals.

How shall that emergency be met? The American Legion declares that all available cellars are filled with cots, and that unless Congress has a change of heart and provides money for hospital construction, dog kennels and hen coops will be called into service. This is not the language of a newspaper. It is language of the national chiefs of the great organization of former soldiers, sailors, marines and war nurses—the American Legion.

This statement is corroborated by Dr. Thomas W. Salmon, who was chief of the government's medical staff in France having to do with neuro-psychiatric cases. He says that the government has been criminally negligent and that, by its negligence, it is paying the way for a source of insanity and consumption that will have a blighting effect upon our national health and morale.

He makes the shocking charge that one-third of the ex-service men receiving treatment at government expense are suffering from nervous-mental troubles, and that six out of every ten so afflicted are insane.

Most of these men are in almshouses and sanitariums. They are rarely visited by government officials to see whether they are properly cared for, or whether the institutions in which they are placed are fireproof or fit for human beings.

Dr. Salmon insists that 50 per cent. of the men suffering from nervous-mental afflictions, with the proper treatment, can be returned to society; but this only can be done in the proper environment in the right kind of institutions and with the benefit of the most expert medical care and treatment.

It is the government's duty to provide all of this and to take these sufferers from cellars and corridors of cheap private contract hospitals, and from the almshouses and private sanitariums, no matter what the expense may be.

Dr. H. A. Patterson, supervisor of medical service, National Tuberculosis Association, says that what Dr. Salmon has pointed out relative to nervous and mental cases applies with even stronger force to the poor victims of tuberculosis.

Shocking as is this indictment of frightful conditions under which our disabled heroes are existing, it has had no seeming effect upon the leaders of Congress. But this memorial is an evidence that the leaders of the American Legion and the members of service organizations are in a desperate mood.

When these men feel called upon to make such a sensational appeal to the conscience of our President, his successor, our national law-makers and the American people, there can be no doubt of coming trouble unless Congress comes to its senses.

Warly has a newspaper service been so strongly endorsed as the Hearst newspapers have been in this instance by this memorial of the American Legion.

Aid Farmers With View to Helping the Consumers

Governor Cox's recommendation concerning relief to our farmers ought to be given the most careful consideration by the Legislature.

If we could get some method by which the waste lands of this State could be put into profitable cultivation, we would help greatly to reduce the cost of living by thoroughly sound economic methods. We want to heed the farmer's demands for aid so far as they are not selfish and would not mean an injury to the rest of the community out of all proportion to the aid which they would bring to the farmers. Wherever society is diversified as it is in Massachusetts and the interests are pretty nearly equal, the problem of balancing the good to one against the harm to another becomes a nice question.

The farmers are entitled to a generous return upon the value of their land, their cattle, their machinery and their own labor, but so are the other elements of the community. What we want is to help the farmer to reduce his costs by reducing the interest on the money he needs to equip himself efficiently, and then to work out methods by which the consumer may get things directly from the farmer at only a reasonable increase above the amount which the farmer receives. After the farmer has been aided to produce, the question then becomes one of reducing the cost of the middle man.

CZECHS and Poles may come from killing. For a township here or there; Slavs and Bulgars may be willing. To drop grudges that they bear; Germans, even, may decide. That square miles and population are no special cause for pride, Nor give glory to a nation.

GREECE and Turkey, for some reason, May decide that wisdom pays, And through one whole, blissful season Get along in peaceful ways; Joy may come to Mexico, Wisdom rising over madness; England will be busy, though, Filling Ireland with sadness.

RUSSIA may become enlightened, All her gloom may disappear, All her wide expanse be brightened. By contentment and good cheer; But when Time has brought about Changed conditions and opinions Britain will be reaching out. Eagerly for new dominions.

FRENCHMEN may pick up the notion That to wish to die for France Indicates absurd emotion. Or impulsive ignorance; But when that comes, as it may— Call it common sense or error— England still will find a way To fill Ireland with terror.

Letters to the Editor

On Boarding U. S. Ships

Editor Boston American:

Dear Sir—In the opinion of Mr. Friedman, acting Attorney-General of the United States, "American ships, wherever they may be, are constructive territory of the United States," by what right can the British authorities board an American vessel and place machine guns on board, as was done in Dublin harbor to an American vessel, according to newspaper dispatches? If such a thing is possible in the harbor of Dublin, then the Sultan of Morocco or the "Froth Bah" of Timbuctoo surely have, or should have, the same rights and privileges. Have they? If not, why not? God save our country!

LOOK YOURSELF OVER.

Do you ever give the half hour before you retire at night to going over in your mind what you have accomplished during the day? If you will follow out this plan conscientiously it will help you to become more capable and efficient. Results cannot be accomplished unless you pass impartial judgment upon yourself, your motives and your work.

Not a day passes that we do not make at least one mistake and that we might have made an improvement in the doing of many a little duty, or greater skill and knowledge might have resulted if we had concentrated rightly.

Give a little special thought to these matters each night when you have time and clear judgment, and you will become a more valued employee—a person of more self-respect.

In your rest and play sports throw off all thought of your worldly work, but the half hour preceding your sleep should be given over to retrospection, introspection and examination of the day.

The thinker gets the best position in life and if the thinking is daily directed toward results that count for something.

VERYWHERE I hear talk of hard times.

Money is tight. Of course, I know that. In fact, I am one of the great army that never knows anything much about money except that it is tight.

In the glad days, which now seem to have been suspended, I used to hear, everywhere I went, about people having so much money. Somehow, I never had so much, but I used to hear about it.

Now I hear about the hard times. The talk is quite depressing, and I found so little consolation in an editorial labelled "Hard Times," which I shall reprint, although it is pretty long.

"The pulpit, the bench and the press, as well as our own experience, all are reminding us, from day to day, of the hardness of the times, so that we have become hardened to the sound of grumbling seems to be as natural to us as to the very John Bull in all England. Now, without doubt, the times are hard, money is scarce, trade is depressed, our manufacturing are stopped. But grumbling doesn't need the matter. It must needs be, now and then, that hard times come, and it is well they should come.

"The thunder, as it rolls fearfully over our heads, has as useful a mission to perform as the gentle dew which, morning and evening, comes down on cooling wings and brings its humble tribute to the flowers. If the times were always prosperous, we should never have obstacles to surmount and difficulties to overcome, we should be a weak and unmanly race. It is this constant struggle with danger and trial which strengthens the hand and improves the heart.

"Adversity is as useful as prosperity. The change from one to the other seems to be the order of nature. Sunshine and storm, moonlight and thick darkness, the still small voice and the destroying whirlwind, sickness and health, beauty and decay, peace and war, seem to follow each other in quick succession, each lasting but long enough to write its lesson upon the heart.

"This constant contrast of light and darkness, of joy and gloom, is ever passing before us, and as it always has been, we may expect it ever will be the law of life. Why, then, complain that our age does not form an exception to the rule? True, our lines just now do not seem to be cast as pleasant places. But yet, if we cast our eyes abroad in the world and compare our fair inheritance with that of any other people, we shall find abundant cause for gladness that we are what we are, or, at least, that we are not what they are.

"We have much left to rejoice over. At peace with all the world; respected and feared by every nation on the globe; the most powerful of the bidders which infest almost every corner of the earth; seeing immense agricultural resources, which, at this very time, are pouring forth their rich treasure with a bountiful liberality; enjoying the fruits of their rich treasure; in time, having the means to comfort and to feed the masses of our population; and, in the future, possessing all these causes for happiness, we have much to be so long and so bitterly? While we lament our temporary embarrassments (which, by the way, are not serious enough to be felt by any country which cannot contract terms with a career of the most brilliant success), while we see all proper means for restoring our country to its prosperity, let us also remember our many blessings, and rejoice and be glad, rather than complain of the dispensations of Providence."

This editorial cheered me up, until I happened to look at the date of the paper. The paper was the "Nantucket Enquirer." The date was 1842.
